How long have you been in business:

CQG Consulting (CQG) has been in business for 12 years (established in 2004).

Explain what your products/services/offering you provide to the community:

CQG provides professional environmental, engineering and planning services.

Our mandate is to provide reliable, agile, timely value for money professional services to our clients in a practical way.

Environmental services include: contaminated land and hazardous materials, ecological and land management, environmental monitoring and management, strategic environmental advice and approvals.

Engineering services include: construction project management, environmental engineering, precision drone services, site closure/rehabilitation planning and more.

Meet some of CQG's Gladstone team:

Alison Bird has been with CQG for more than four years and has been pivotal in the growth of the business in Gladstone. Alison oversees our quality, health, safety and environment management systems independently certified to ISO9001, AS/NZS 4801 and ISO 14001.

Her experience in the tender and insurance world is just one way she has helped develop the company into a stable business with a diverse client base.

Charlie Sotiris has recently joined CQG, bringing a wealth of experience to the business, particularly in the waste management sector.

Charlie has more than 30 years' experience gained in local government (community and corporate sectors); comprising management, reporting, communications, customer service and workplace health and safety aspects. What makes you special or stand out:

We operate in accordance with our company motto – “we listen, we understand, we deliver”. Alison and Charlie in the Gladstone Office epitomise this approach, which has seen our business grow on the basis of repeat client engagement.

Greatest success from 2016 so far:

This year we established our precision drone services throughout the region. Our company director, Patrice Brown, received the GEA Forty Calis Award and the Telstra Business Women's Awards Queensland Entrepreneur Award for 2016.
